1. Prior to World War II, Georgiy M. Malenkov was Chief of Personnel of the Central Committee of the Communist Party. It is very possible that during that time he had had some connection with high-level intelligence personnel who were being sent on foreign assignments. It is doubtful that he would have had any connection with lower-level workers selected for work abroad.
2. Malenkov was never appointed by Stalin as coordinator of the various Soviet intelligence services.
